

I am steadfastly against any measures that would mandate the implantation of copy protection technology in digital television receivers.

I believe that the proposed measures would be ineffective in curtailing prohibited use of digital content and would unfairly limit fair use of content for people such as myself.

I, like thousands of other consumers, would not make new purchases of equipment with these limitations and would either look to acquire equipment without the limitations, or seek out sources of additional equipment or other means as necessary to circumvent the limitations.
